Knowledge and Skills: Applying Orthographic Knowledge in Reading and Spelling

- Developing an understanding that there are multiple ways to spell some phonemes and choosing between multiple graphemes to spell a phoneme
- Using the position of the grapheme or phoneme and their knowledge of position-based tendencies, as necessary, to support spelling and determine accurate pronunciation when reading

(Note: Instruction in grapheme-phoneme correspondence should focus on teaching students the “most common spelling” grapheme for that phoneme in that position to support students in making the correct choices when reading and spelling. Orthographic knowledge cannot be taught in isolation and needs to be practised and applied in word decoding and spelling.)

Knowledge and Skills: Applying Morphological Knowledge in Reading and Spelling

- Understanding that words consist of bases that convey meaning and that can be modified with affixes (prefixes and suffixes) to change the meaning of the word. Adding prefixes and/or suffixes may have three other impacts on the resulting words:
 - o changing the word’s function or role in a sentence (e.g., changing a verb to a noun);
 - o changing the word’s pronunciation (e.g., medic vs. medicine); and/or
 - o uncommonly, changing the word’s spelling (e.g., hop vs. hopping, divide vs. division)
- Developing the ability to segment words into recognizable morphemes and to apply their morphological knowledge to spell and read longer and more complex words

Knowledge and Skills: Applying Morphological Knowledge in Reading and Spelling

- Understanding that words consist of bases that convey meaning and that can be modified with affixes (prefixes and suffixes) to change the meaning of the word. Adding prefixes and/or suffixes may have three other impacts on the resulting words:
 - changing the word’s function or role in a sentence (e.g., changing a verb to a noun);
 - changing the word’s pronunciation (e.g., medic vs. medicine); and/or
 - uncommonly, changing the word’s spelling (e.g., hop vs. hopping, divide vs. division)
- Developing the ability to segment words into recognizable morphemes and to apply their morphological knowledge to spell and read longer and more complex words

Knowledge and Skills: Applying Morphological Knowledge in Reading and Spelling
 Understanding that words consist of bases that convey meaning and that can be modified with affixes (prefixes and suffixes) to change the meaning of the word. Adding prefixes and/or suffixes may have three other impacts on the resulting words:

- changing the word's function or role in a sentence (e.g., changing a verb to a noun);
- changing the word's pronunciation (e.g., medic vs. medicine); and/or
- uncommonly, changing the word's spelling (e.g., hop vs. hopping, divide vs. division)
